So far, I've been learning German, French, and Spanish (hey, don't scoff. I'm an empty-nester!) through the Paul Noble system and I completely understand why his learning system is rated highly. Paul sets you up for success by identifying the similarities between the subject language and English. For instance, by adding 'ch' onto 'l' you get the German "l

Considering I am on level 2 of Rosetta Stone, (which is around 30-40 hours in) you'd think I would have a grasp on the language. And, by and large I suppose I know a lot of words that are separate from each other, but I've never been able to form those words into a coherent sentence. Perhaps it's the leg up that Rosetta Stone gave me, which it absolutely did, but even after 40 or so hours there, I believe I've learned more in 3 hours with Paul Noble's program than vice versa. I listen to it while I run and can now string together sentence, I now understand grammar better than I ever have (something Rosetta Stone doesn't even touch on, it's a guessing game with them) and I can now make sense of the translation of words, with German the word Sie means, She, You, They. And I had no idea when to use which, but, now and I'm sure with common sense after it was explained, I grasp it with ease. While I may not be completely fluent, I can say it was the best $5 I could have spent in any area and especially on a language learning system. One down side, I don't know how to spell the words but you can figure that out once you learn how it all works and sound them out. German does use a few wonky symbols that this program hasn't covered, but I'm only on "1" so, we'll see if they ever mention the strange symbols. The fact that I can run and practice this makes me feel as if this is the summer I finally master languages.

I have struggled for years to feel fluent in (a separate study of) Spanish, with two years of school study, and am usually a quick study on any subject, good in English and linguistics. But learning a new language is a challenge if you cannot do sink or swim in-country, and I've never felt I could completely do it, living in the U.S. In fact, I have never done it completely, prior to Paul Noble's programs. Nonetheless I am determined to learn German for various needs (and finally master Spanish afterwards!). After buying a number of other programs, mobile apps, signing up for a few different website learning centers ("memberships") and buying some other audible books, the most I could have said prior to this book is that I know a chunk of vocabulary. Other programs' fast verbalizing of new sentences was frustrating; they'd repeat things twice but I could not understand 100% of what letters were said (was that a "t" or a "d" ?? What was that fast-verbalized syllable???) etc.... Despite all these other purchases, before Paul Noble's program I could not make new sentences in German (or Spanish), except maybe a couple 3-word highly simple present tense sentences. All I could really do was repeat sentences taught to me in these programs, and that is NOT speaking a language! UNTIL THIS PROGRAM -- WOW!!! I am now voicing new sentences in my head as I go about my day, and I know I will be proficient enough soon for my needs. I love this program!!! Finally, someone intelligent enough to see the problem with adult learning has put together a program that builds on our native language, showing us how much we already know, building on that, showing us how one English word becomes a German word, how groups of words are related and can-we-guess-how-this-word-would-be-said-in-German (YES!! WE CAN!!)...Casually and pleasantly drilling us over and over on new possible sentence structures, until we really really get it. Now all the other programs are merely added vocabulary databases, and this is THE learning track. Paul Noble is the ticket. I am so grateful! Thank you Paul Noble!!!

I have been studying German for about 3 years now. There is no single course that will "do it all". You will need to expose yourself to a whole lot of different material. I'm still chopping away, learning vocabulary, reading books by Andre' Klein and listening to Audible - but I've come a long way. Perhaps the best course for me was the Pimsleur course (4 courses for a total of about 60 hours, costing about $500+). However, this 15 hour course by Paul Noble, excels in certain topics. The Pimsleur course avoids explaining grammar. Paul Noble takes the opposite approach: He explicitly explains everything. He is very methodical. Paul Noble explains the connections between English and German, and how much the two languages share. He shows connections which I have not seen before, but which now seem so obvious. He gives useful rules for constructing sentences. His one lesson about the use of "dem" made the whole course worth it..
