Customer Reviews

William Leahy, MD, practices neurology outside Washington, DC. He became involved with home health aide education both out of an interest in the care his patients received and to give direction and meaning to the lives of young people in his community. Royalties from his books fund a foundation for teaching high school students health care careers. Dr. Leahy speaks to groups about enriching our communities and volunteers his spare time to teach. He has been named a "2005 Hometown Hero" by Washington Magazine.

a lot of really good information for caregivers...what a thankless, but undeniably important, job.

While I love the book, I do not like it that it has library markings and cataloging from a library in Brewster. That worries me. I hope it wasn't stolen from that library then sold to me!
