"Every son longs for his father's direction, for Dad to make the son a leader. 'King Me!' the son cries out. . . . God calls upon fathers to mentor their sons." •Steve Farrar Narrator Chris Fabry has an engaging approach and tone with this lesson--a well-crafted and timely reminder that sons need thoughtful and intentional fathers for them to become effective men. Young boys, in particular, need structure and warmth from their fathers to internalize a good system for living. They need even more care and firm boundaries during their teenage years. With a more historical than biblical tone, Fabry offers examples of ancient kings who failed to provide these things for their sons, who then lost their kingdoms and their way. Overall, this is a broadly useful guide from a tireless author who knows how to deliver an effective lesson."

King Me is a masterpiece. Every caring dad really needs to read it!-Dr. Joe White, President Kanakuk Kamps Inc., Branson, Missouri --This text refers to the Audible Audio Edition edition.

A book every father must read guiding its readers to strengthening and improving your relationship with your son or grandson. It stresses the importance of approving your son instead of disapproving, the importance of compliments and positive attitudes within the family in lieu of creating stressful disputes through an overbearing, fault finding attitude. Want to keep your son from becoming a rebel? This is the book for you!

I really found this book to be inspirational and informative. I have two sons myself. A two year old, and a three year old. I don't think that I was a "bad" father before reading this book, but I do feel like reading this book made me think more about what kind of father I am, and what kind of father I want to be. The author gives you a good Biblical perspective of how fathers should deal with different issues that will crop up in the lives of both you and your son(s). I've read Pointman and Finishing Strong by Steve Farrar also, and I have always respected him as a great Christian author. It was great to see him be somewhat vulnerable in this book and be honest about struggles that he has faced in his own family. The author pulls no punches and this book will make you take a hard look at how you are living your life and how you may need to change your lifestyle and your parenting style to better raise your own son in the way he should go. My mom bought this book for me because they give it to new fathers at her church. I think that it's a great book, and it would make a great gift for, or be a worthwhile purchase for any dad out there who wants to live a Godly life and raise his son to do the same.

Without question this is one of the the best books I've ever read. As a father to a 7 year old son and one on the way I now understand how vital it is for me to mentor my sons to be the men of character that God has called them to be. Every single chapter in this book is filled with not only wisdom, scripture but also nuts and bolts type ideas for you to implement in your home. If you are a father or desire to be one day than this is a MUST read that should be on every dads shelf. Truly a masterpiece!!!

Good quick points. Wish he would have delved a bit more into the good and bad kings and their sons.

My husband read this book in a matter of a few days (which is surprising because he is a rather slow reader) and he is already lending it out to a co-worker. He will only lend a book out if he truly loved it and thinks it will help others.

I love this book!! I don't have kids but it's challenged me to change my thinking on my relationship with my father and also whenever my wife and I have kids. Thanks so much!!

Many fathers have not really mentored their sons, mainly because they were never mentored themselves and have no reference or tools to do so. This book puts into motion some things to think about to get the wheels going. This book challenges fathers to go from just being a provider into one that equips your son to be a man.

Very strong and right on for the boys and fathers. Steve addresses head on the hard issues we face in our culture, exposes the church's weakness on them, and encourages us all to pursue restoration in the midst of a deteriorating society. With the good news of God's purposeful design in grooming our children for greatness, Farrar shares his heartfelt wisdom on building sons, and preparing them through mentorship, as they learn to guard their hearts and set out on a determined mission as empowered men. Blessings, Steve !
