Synopsis

In 2012 the authors flew to Europe in order to view David Hockney's "A Bigger Picture" Exhibition at Museum Ludwig in Cologne. Their itinerary also included England and Amsterdam. At the end of each day they wrote up their day's experiences and posted them to their blog. Collected here as part of their "Travel With Us" series, "Travel with us to Amsterdam, England and Cologne" is a humorous eye witness account of their adventures. Highlights of the book include a visit to the Anne Frank and Van Gogh museums in Amsterdam, visits to the Christmas Markets, the Claudius Therme spa, and the Hockney Exhibit in Cologne as well as various misadventures, including sprained ankles, stinky towels, surly waiters, and breakdowns on trains. This book, which includes photos, is an honest and often very funny portrait of the joys and frustrations that come with international travel.

Customer Reviews

I had to retrain my way of rating books on this one, because I'm so used to stories. You know, ones with characters, a beginning, a middle, an end, some conflict and resolve. This is just a series of blog posts on a trip to England, Amsterdam, and Germany, so I couldn't expect a lot of character development and plot resolution. But I was pleasantly surprised at how easy it was to read and how much fun I had reading it. There were one or two longish entries that got a little tedious to read (The Vodafone Post was the main culprit), but the more engaging entries made up for those. I enjoyed the writing styles of both Mary and Lis, and I liked how they entered little side-notes in each other's posts. This is a quick read, and if you've ever thought of traveling to England, Amsterdam, or Cologne, you'll enjoy it. There's more insights in Amsterdam and Cologne than of England, I think, but all of it is entertaining to read. And now I have to add the Cologne Christmas Markets to my bucket list (it's getting longer by the minute.)

A fun way to travel along with Mary and Lis, enjoying their humorous and witty commentary as they travel in Europe. Both useful in that they offer reviews and recommendations, and fun for the armchair traveler as well.
