With titles including How to Build a Fizzy Rocket, How to Build a Tornado in a Bottle, and How to Make a Mystery Smell Balloon (all 2010), the Hands-On Science Fun series lives up to its name. And what is more fun than that age-old miracle of science, green slime? The going gets gooey right away with shots of a gleeful little girl (and, in one shot, an adult helper) mashing the muck with enthusiasm. The tools (dish, food coloring, cornstarch, spoon, measuring cup) are laid out, and each very simple step is accompanied by a photo. The rectangular shape of the book makes it perfect for laying open on tables or countertops, leaving hands free for stirring and mixing. Then come two minor experiments, though they are presented more as suggestions: Gently rest your hand on top of the slime. Then quickly slap the surface of the slime. What happens? The science of it is subsequently explained in three succinct spreads. The only thing missing? Advice on cleaning up the inevitable mess. Preschool-Grade 1. --Daniel Kraus --This text refers to the Library Binding edition.

Very good book for teaching How to writing. We actually did this in class and kids had a great time making it and playing with it.

Loved that I could integrate curriculum with this easy reader. We actually made the slime and wrote about it in an observation/science center. But more importantly, I was looking for "how to" mentor texts for our writers unit! Will be using this book for years to come!

Gift for my young niece who loves to "make potions"

It's easy to follow and makes great slime! My first graders love it.

When I got the book, I was disappointed. This how-to method can be found on Internet/youtube anywhere. My kids and I have already played with it several times. It's not special. The book is really big with large prints and big pictures, but only few pages. Personally, I will not recommend for kids age 6 and up. It's way too simple for them.

The kids love this. It's simple, it's inexpensive and it cleans up easily providing you don't go over the top with food coloring.

Good Book!
